

WHAT DO WE MEAN BY “OBSERVE TOGETHER?”
GET TO KNOW THE
MAJOR PLAYERS INVOLVED IN LANDSEALOT.

THE LANDSEALOT CONSORTIUM

Is a group of 20 partner organisations from across Europe. With their different expertises and scientific backgrounds, the Consortium works together to improve how we observe, study and manage land-sea interface areas and develop a Common Observation Strategy.

LANDSEALOT INTEGRATION LABS (LILS)

Are nine testing sites across Europe located at crucial land-sea interface areas like river mouths, estuaries and deltas. In these sites, researchers and their community partners are piloting new methods, technologies and community-based approaches to improve and streamline observation.

RESEARCH INFRASTRUCTURES

Are facilities that provide resources and services to European research efforts. These may include computing systems, communication networks, data infrastructures and archives to support research and innovation, as well as physical infrastructure or platforms for data collection. Three RIs participate in LandSeaLot: DANUBIUS-RI, ICOS ERIC and JERICO-RI. They work to harmonise observation methods, integrate different sources of data, and contribute to a common observation strategy.

THE LANDSEALOT SCIENCE COMMITTEE FORUM

Is a group of researchers, data scientists and data managers (including the LILs) who are bridging gaps across scientific domains and communities to improve observation.

THE LANDSEALOT CO-DESIGNER FORUM

Includes local and regional stakeholders, high-level European institutions and data services like Copernicus and EMODnet, and users and managers of the land-sea interface area who are working together to co-design a Common Observation Strategy for European land-sea interface areas.

THE LANDSEALOT CITIZEN SCIENCE HUB

Seeks to unlock the potential of citizen science for observing the land-sea interface area. It brings together researchers and local communities to test emerging technologies, fill knowledge gaps and address scientific questions.
